Packing Butter for Winter. HENRY STEWART.

While winter dairying is slowly inchange in the common methods of the farm, that while it is the most profitable get a half pailful of hot water, as hot as part of dairy farming, it is not likely, for some years yet, to be sufficiently practiced to fully supply the demand for ticed to fully supply the demand for the fact when years yet, as soon as possible; then get a half pailful of hot water, as hot as expose them again to the sum and breeze until the sugar is quite hard and then put in the refrigerator until ready to serve. butter in the winter. Thus the summer dairyman may still find it profitable to dairyman may still find it profitable to pack the fall made butter for winter sale. And, indeed, he may do this with advantage as well as safety, for when the best quality of butter is packed in the best manner, it will improve during the keeping from the fall until winter, and be really more desirable than the ordinary mine cases out of ten it will save the ports. It has been tried on man and I winter made article. This is due to the borse. It has been tried on man, and I fact that by the slow ripening in the used it myself on my own horse. Some package during storage in a cool, clean one may say that this remedy is no good, place, and in sweet air-tight packages, but if I had a valuable horse it is the there is a slow internal change going on remedy I would try. Nothing will kill in the butter by which its finest flavor is developed, and, as with fruits, so the butter is greatly improved by what may truly be called in both-a process of ripening. Two things are to be con sidered in this subject, always, however, premising that the butter is of the best quality, as it easily may be when it is of packing the butter.

The best package for this purpose is a new white oak pail, made of sound timber, free of knots and blemishes, half an inch thick, well jointed, and perfectly seasoned. This pail holds fifty pounds. White spruce is the next best material, and is quite as free from any objectionable odor or taste given to the butter. The pail is prepared by a thorough cleaning in pure water. It should be soaked for at least twenty-four hours, then well scalded, and then filled with brine. This is done so that it may stay under the brine twenty. four hours before the butter is packed. The pail being ready, the butter is packed as soon as it has been finished at the second working, the day after it is churned. It is salted in the usual manner, one ounce to the pound of butter, of the very purest and finest ground salt. It is worked as dry as it can be. The pail being emptied of the brine, is dusted all over the inside with the salt, and the cumbers, and peppers in small pieces, and butter is put in only so much at a time sprinkle with salt, and drain four hours. as will make a layer of four inches. This Mix one pound Coleman's mustard, two presser, made like a common potato mustard-seed, two ounces celery-seed, masher, so that all the moisture is four pounds brown sugar, with inpressed out and drained off. If in this gredients; cover with good apple vinemoisture there is any cloud or shade of milk, the butter has not been made as This makes five gallons. Take up when well as it should be, and will not come | cool. out in perfect condition. Not a shade of milk is to be permitted in the butter for this use, but any moisture that drains from it should be as clear as the dew on the morning grass. Then the butter thus put in is lightly dusted with salt, and another layer is put in in the same manner, until the pail is filled to a quarter of an inch of the edge of the

If the butter is not sufficient for a full pail, it is packed as far as it can be and covered with salt, and the pail is put away until the next churning, being kept covered with a clean towel. Then the next churning is packed in the same manner until the pail is filled as men tioned, when the butter is covered with a piece of good, heavy shirting cloth, well washed in boiling water and steeped in brine, with the pail. It is cut half an inch larger than the outer edge of the pail. It is pressed down on the butter to exclude all air, a little salt being sprinkled under it, and is then covered with dry salt to the edge of the pail; this salt is well pressed dows and is covered with a sheet of parchment paper, on which is printed the name of the butter-maker and the dairy, and any handsome device that may be used as a trade-mark. This is in justice to the person who will take all this trouble to make a fine article of butter. The cover, treated as the pail has been, is then securely fastened down and the pail is stored in a cool, clean, sweet cellar where the air is dry. Butter so packed will be in the finest condition until May or June of the next year, and should bring the highest market rates .-Orange Judd Farmer.

There is a belief that prevails among many farmers that many green manures are sometimes injurious to crops, causing the soil to turn sour instead of making it mellow and light. This can only happen when the soil is full of stagnant water. If there are underdrains the surplus water will filter through the soil and air from the surface will follow, which will stimulate fermentation of the green manure still more. Something depends on the kind of green herbage plowed under. A growth of clover has a large proportion of nitrogen in it, causing it to give off much heat when it decays, while a growth of sorrel rots more slowly, and may be said to sour the land, not because it is itself sour, but because it has too little nitrogen to get up much heat. A dressing of quicklime sown on the field after any green manure has been plowed under greatly adds to its effectiveness .- American Cultivator.

Increased Call for Farms.

It is a fact that the "hard times" experienced in town and city have had the effect to turn an increased measure of attention to the tarm and the advantages it OUR IMMENSE or all purposes. affords for a home. Within a limited circle of observation in this central part of the State a considerable number of farms have been recently purchased by parties from the cities out of employment, and therefore out of the opportunity to earn their daily bread. If we must have periodical hard times there is then a measure of good resulting from such a condition of the country's industries, in that people in the always crowded cities are led to look out to the country where there is always room, and are let to see that the farm always furnishes employment to the owner and his family, and liberally supplies the home with the comforts and necessities of life. There may not be so much money handled from their labor on the farm, but in many cases that labor judiciously expended on the land will bring more for the outlay in other and necessary forms than the money earnings in the city purchase. This drift, then, from the city to better and happier homes on the farms should be encouraged. There never was, and probably never will be, a better time to make the change than now. Farms wherever found for sale, are surprisingly low in value. There is room for all who !

may wish to come, v.nd labor in plenty for all in want of wort .- Maine Farmer.
